Founder's Contributions:

Zarina: “The homepage screen is pretty straightforward. It contains the head nav bar. It also has two panels. The first panel tells the user what events they have scheduled for later that day. It contains links to those events UGOEvent pages. The second panel prompts the user to review events they've attended in the past but have not yet reviewed.”

Henry: “Schedule is organized into several rows. Displaying today's events, this week's events, next week's events, and future events. Each even has its own 'tile' which contains: the picture relating to the event if there is one, the start time, the name of the organization presenting, the name of the event, a link to the full event description, and a brief description. When no events are found, it will return a link to sign up for events.”

Elitza: “This is the page that shows all of the events that will be coming up in the near future. It will show the activity name, the organizer and the picture associated with that club or even and the time/date when this will occur. Furthermore, it will contain a rating based on either the user's preference or the average rating of the other users who have attended this event in the past. There will also be a short description which will end with a link to the event's page. The columns having to do with organizer, time, date, and rating will be sortable.”

Tanner: “The bored page is laid out with one randomly generated event in the center of the page. This event panel includes the event name, location, event holders, and contact information. Below this panel are two buttons, one to add the event to your schedule, and another to generate another event to attend. The generated events are soon-to-come events, so that the user can use this page to find something to do in a moment's time.”

Ami: “This is the main events page that you will see when you click on the events tab in the navbar. It serves as a hub for the other functionalities in the tab. It has 2 other button links: Search and Create, both detailed below.

This is the create event page. Here is where people will fill out a form to add a new event page. It has links to the search page, detailed below and the events main page detailed above.

This is the search for events page. Here people can search for an event by name or by tags. The search results appear below the search bar as mini-profiles. It has button links to the create and main pages detailed above and a new link underneath each event result labelled "View Event Page" which opens a page within the page to the event's individual profile page, detailed below in profilesrn.

This is the event profile page. It has all the information on the given event. It opens as a page within the framework eventpage. It gives the user all the information provided by the event create and offers 2 buttons: one to add the event to your schedule, indicating you are going to attend and one to write a review, which allows the user to offer feedback to other users and the event organizer.”

James: “User Profile Page: This page displays the user profile as viewed by the profile owner. it includes the profile picture, name, what groups the user is a member of, their contact info, who their friends are, and a brief view of their upcoming schedule. Links are provided to change the profile picture, change what groups the user is a part of, manage friends, and edit the user's schedule.

Organization Profile Page: This page is similar to the user profile, but displays information regarding an organization. Displayed on this page are the organization's emblem, name, description, primary contact info, group members, and schedule of events owned by this organization. Links are provided to edit the picture, description, members, and alter the schedule.”
